New superintendent hired after Mistele’s retirement

In anticipation of ex-superintendent Robert Mistele’s retirement in late June, the district board of trustees completed an extensive nationwide search for new candidates over the summer and eventually selected Dr. Michael Grove as the district’s new superintendent.

Grove, who has worked in education for almost 30 years, was selected out of a pool of approximately 30 candidates after going through several rigorous rounds of interviews. He was most recently the associate superintendent for the San Dieguito High School District, which has 10 schools and over 13,000 students and includes both middle and high schools.

“I’m enjoying the small size of LGUHSD because there is definitely a family feel and everyone knows each other,” Grove said in email responses to questions from The Falcon.

Principal Paul Robinson said that San Dieguito District shares many aspects in common with the Los Gatos-Saratoga District, so he’s “really excited about having [Grove] come to the district.”

In the past, Grove has also been a director of curriculum and principal of both high schools and middle schools in the San Dieguito District. Grove used to teach English for nine years and also coached speech and debate on the side.

Grove became an administrator in 1999 when he started as an assistant principal and Western Association of Schools and Colleges coordinator, eventually becoming a full-time middle school assistant principal.

After serving as both a middle and high school principal, Grove became the executive director of curriculum, instruction, and assessment and soon became the associate superintendent of educational services.

Besides his experience in middle and high schools, Grove has also served as a professor in the Master’s in Educational Leadership Program at California State University San Marcos and holds a doctorate in Educational Administration from a UC Irvine and UCLA joint program.

Grove’s wife, Melissa Grove shares in his love for education and works as an AP English and Film Studies teacher at Rancho Buena High School in the Vista Unified School District.

For the time being, she is remaining in San Diego while looking for a new job in the Bay Area and working on renting out their San Diego home.

Grove officially began his tenure on Sept. 1, succeeding Mistele, who had worked in the Los Gatos-Saratoga district as an administrator and superintendent for a total of 18 years.

Two AP social studies classes shift curricula

Students taking junior and senior-level AP social studies courses have seen major changes this year aimed at making the material more accessible and relevant.

The AP U.S. Government and Politics course has shifted its curriculum moderately to make it easier for students as well as teachers and administrators around the country that the AP U.S. History and European History curricula have been completely altered.

Teachers and students around the country that the AP U.S. History (APUSH) had criticized the social studies tests with the release of a new APUSH test in 2014.

For the full story on the Los Gatos game, see pg. 19.

New rules to curb JUULing enforced by administration

Following a steep increase in JUULing on campus last year, the administration began the school year with several new policies aimed to better monitor students outside of the classroom.

Each classroom has been given its own set of flip-flops, colored code, or name in the 49ers Foundation to help students better prepare for class and to keep their cells phones with them when leaving the classroom during class time.

According to assistant principal Brian Thompson, the administration tightened up the rules to keep students from disrupting other classes by socializing with their friends during class time in the bathrooms, or by JUULing and vaping, which were problems noticed by the administration last year.

Thompson said the color-coded flip-flops are intended to keep students in their designated area. He also justified the prohibition of students taking their cell phones with them out of class with his observation of students texting or calling their friends to encourage them to leave their classes as well.

“We’ve had students go outside the classroom and wait outside the door, texting their friends to meet them,” Thompson said.

Although Thompson is aware of the loopholes in the new system, he said he would rather focus his energy on rebuilding a healthy relationship between the students and administration.

가수의 음악 도서관

THE saratoga falcon

Saratoga High School >> Saratoga, CA

Newhall policies overly restrictive.

The school’s annual Homecoming football game will be held at Levi’s Stadium on Sept. 24 against Santa Clara. It’s the result of an outreach effort by the San Francisco 49ers to local communities.

The admission ticket will cost $25, while the cost of a bus ticket will be $10. Homecoming commissioner on pg. 19.

by Ananya Vadlakonda & Christine Chang

OPINION

Summer homework

Reading "The Crucible" over the summer for English 11 was not as bad as students expected. pg. 6

ENTERTAINMENT

Homecoming movies

by Dave/Reid & Jeffrey Ma

Two AP social studies classes shift curricula

by Andrew Li & Jeffrey Ma

Students taking junior and senior-level AP social studies courses have seen major changes this year aimed at making the material more accessible and relevant.

The AP U.S. Government and Politics course has shifted its curriculum moderately to match the revised AP test, while the AP U.S. History curriculum has been completely altered.

Teachers and students around the country that the AP U.S. History and European History curricula have been completely altered.

The AP U.S. Government and Politics course has shifted its curriculum moderately to make it easier for students as well as teachers and administrators around the country.

Teachers and students around the country that the AP U.S. History (APUSH) had criticized the social studies tests with the release of a new APUSH test in 2014.

For the full story on the Los Gatos game, see pg. 19.

New rules to curb JUULing enforced by administration

by Ananya Vadlakonda & Christine Chang

Following a steep increase in JUULing on campus last year, the administration began the school year with several new policies aimed to better monitor students outside of the classroom.

Each classroom has been given its own set of flip-flops, colored code, or name in the 49ers Foundation to help students better prepare for class and to keep their cells phones with them when leaving the classroom during class time.

According to assistant principal Brian Thompson, the administration tightened up the rules to keep students from disrupting other classes by socializing with their friends during class time in the classrooms, or by JUULing and vaping, which were problems noticed by the administration last year.

Thompson said the color-coded flip-flops are intended to keep students in their designated area. He also justified the prohibition of students taking their cell phones with them out of class with his observation of students texting or calling their friends to encourage them to leave their classes as well.

“We’ve had students go outside the classroom and wait outside the door, texting their friends to meet them,” Thompson said.

Although Thompson is aware of the loopholes in the new system, he said he would rather focus his energy on rebuilding a healthy relationship between the students and administration.

by Ananya Vadlakonda & Christine Chang

Following a steep increase in JUULing on campus last year, the administration began the school year with several new policies aimed to better monitor students outside of the classroom.

Each classroom has been given its own set of flip-flops, colored code, or name in the 49ers Foundation to help students better prepare for class and to keep their cell phones with them when leaving the classroom during class time.

According to assistant principal Brian Thompson, the administration tightened up the rules to keep students from disrupting other classes by socializing with their friends during class time in the classrooms, or by JUULing and vaping, which were problems noticed by the administration last year.

Thompson said the color-coded flip-flops are intended to keep students in their designated area. He also justified the prohibition of students taking their cell phones with them out of class with his observation of students texting or calling their friends to encourage them to leave their classes as well.

“We’ve had students go outside the classroom and wait outside the door, texting their friends to meet them,” Thompson said.

Although Thompson is aware of the loopholes in the new system, he said he would rather focus his energy on rebuilding a healthy relationship between the students and administration.

OPINION

Summer homework

Reading "The Crucible" over the summer for English 11 was not as bad as students expected. pg. 6

ENTERTAINMENT

Homecoming movies

by Ananya Vadlakonda & Christine Chang

Following a steep increase in JUULing on campus last year, the administration began the school year with several new policies aimed to better monitor students outside of the classroom.

Each classroom has been given its own set of flip-flops, colored code, or name in the 49ers Foundation to help students better prepare for class and to keep their cell phones with them when leaving the classroom during class time.

According to assistant principal Brian Thompson, the administration tightened up the rules to keep students from disrupting other classes by socializing with their friends during class time in the classrooms, or by JUULing and vaping, which were problems noticed by the administration last year.

Thompson said the color-coded flip-flops are intended to keep students in their designated area. He also justified the prohibition of students taking their cell phones with them out of class with his observation of students texting or calling their friends to encourage them to leave their classes as well.

“We’ve had students go outside the classroom and wait outside the door, texting their friends to meet them,” Thompson said.

Although Thompson is aware of the loopholes in the new system, he said he would rather focus his energy on rebuilding a healthy relationship between the students and administration.

OPINION

Summer homework

Reading "The Crucible" over the summer for English 11 was not as bad as students expected. pg. 6

ENTERTAINMENT

Homecoming movies

Two AP social studies classes shift curricula

Students taking junior and senior-level AP social studies courses have seen major changes this year aimed at making the material more accessible and relevant.

The AP U.S. Government and Politics course has shifted its curriculum moderately to make it easier for students as well as teachers and administrators around the country.

Teachers and students around the country that the AP U.S. History and European History curricula have been completely altered.

The AP U.S. Government and Politics course has shifted its curriculum moderately to make it easier for students as well as teachers and administrators around the country.

Teachers and students around the country that the AP U.S. History (APUSH) had criticized the social studies tests with the release of a new APUSH test in 2014.

For the full story on the Los Gatos game, see pg. 19.

New rules to curb JUULing enforced by administration

by Ananya Vadlakonda & Christine Chang

Following a steep increase in JUULing on campus last year, the administration began the school year with several new policies aimed to better monitor students outside of the classroom.

Each classroom has been given its own set of flip-flops, colored code, or name in the 49ers Foundation to help students better prepare for class and to keep their cell phones with them when leaving the classroom during class time.

According to assistant principal Brian Thompson, the administration tightened up the rules to keep students from disrupting other classes by socializing with their friends during class time in the classrooms, or by JUULing and vaping, which were problems noticed by the administration last year.

Thompson said the color-coded flip-flops are intended to keep students in their designated area. He also justified the prohibition of students taking their cell phones with them out of class with his observation of students texting or calling their friends to encourage them to leave their classes as well.

“We’ve had students go outside the classroom and wait outside the door, texting their friends to meet them,” Thompson said.

Although Thompson is aware of the loopholes in the new system, he said he would rather focus his energy on rebuilding a healthy relationship between the students and administration.
Rodriguez returns to teach class after ‘retiring’

Despite Spanish teacher Amanda Rodriguez returning to teach class this year, she has been teaching for many years. She is known by many students as a favorite teacher. “She was always my favorite teacher,” said senior Sam Brown.

Rodriguez was originally assigned to teach after ‘retiring’ this year, but due to demand, she was able to return to teach class. “They needed me to teach, so I was able to return,” she said.

Rodriguez enjoys teaching and is known for her engaging teaching style. She is well-liked by many students. “She always made class interesting and fun,” said junior, Sheena Patel.

Rodriguez is also known for her ability to help students. She is always available to help students, whether they need help with homework or just need someone to talk to. “She is always there for us,” said senior, Sam Brown.

Rodriguez is a great asset to the school and is very much missed by many students. “She is one of our favorite teachers,” said junior, Sheena Patel.

Nonetheless, the new policies have faced some backlash from many students.

“Rodriguez deserves her retirement,” said junior, Ava Riaziat. “She has worked hard for many years and it is time for her to relax.”

On the other hand, some students are happy to see Rodriguez return to teach class. “I am glad to see Rodriguez back in the classroom,” said senior, Sam Brown.

In conclusion, Rodriguez is a beloved teacher who has helped many students over the years. Her return to teach class is greatly appreciated by many students. "We are happy to have her back," said senior, Ava Riaziat.

The school administration is pleased with Rodriguez’s return and is confident that she will continue to be a valuable asset to the school.

despite this, Rodriguez is still able to make an impact on her students. She is respected and loved by many students and is a great addition to the school staff. "We are happy to have her back," said senior, Ava Riaziat.

In conclusion, Rodriguez is a beloved teacher who has helped many students over the years. Her return to teach class is greatly appreciated by many students. "We are happy to have her back," said senior, Ava Riaziat.
Veteran Spanish teacher joins staff

By Marlene Kang

After four years of teaching at Hilltop High School, Melissa Hesselgrave has transitioned to St. John Bosco High School and is teaching at the school.

She said she has already taught more of her goals at St. John Bosco High School.

In the classroom, she focuses on building relationships and establishing an environment of mutual trust. Students think of her as a reliable resource.

Seven years ago, Marks began teaching at Sequoia High School in Redwood City, and found that teaching was much more fulfilling than her job as an attorney.

At Rubidoux, Hesselgrave taught students about the Persian and Greek perspectives on life, but she also taught them about her own Indian roots.

When she started college at Stanford, her mother asked if she would ever be interested in teaching. She said “no way.”

She did not plan on becoming a teacher, but by the time she graduated from college, she was interested in teaching.

A few years ago, Wang started teaching at Saratoga High School.

She has been teaching at Saratoga High School for over 20 years. She said she loves teaching and helping students understand new ways to learn.

History teacher change career to pursue passions

By Alex Tu

After graduating from Stanford with a bachelor’s degree in History, she worked for several years in the software industry before deciding to turn to education. Wang began teaching at Stanford University in 2009.

As a software engineer, she worked on various projects and developed software for different purposes. She became interested in teaching after taking a class on computer science and found that she enjoyed teaching computer programming.

Wang started teaching at Stanford University in 2009 and has been teaching there ever since.

When Wang was asked what she enjoyed most about teaching, she said,“I enjoy the interaction with the students and the challenges of teaching different courses in various environments.”

Wang has been teaching computer science courses at Stanford University for over 10 years. She loves the challenges of teaching and enjoys helping students learn to think critically and creatively.

At Stanford, Wang continues to explore new ways of teaching and learning. She is always seeking new ways to engage students in the learning process and help them develop critical thinking skills.

Wang emphasizes the importance of continuous learning and professional growth. As a teacher, she is always exploring new ideas and strategies to improve her teaching practices.

Wang has received numerous awards for her teaching and contributions to the field of computer science education. She is a respected and well-respected teacher who inspires her students to pursue their passions and achieve their goals.

Wang’s dedication to teaching and learning has earned her recognition and respect from her peers and students. She is truly a beacon of light in the field of computer science education, inspiring new generations of students to pursue their passions and achieve their goals.

Wang’s commitment to teaching and learning is evident in her dedication to her students and her continuous efforts to improve her teaching practices. She is always seeking new ways to engage students in the learning process and help them develop critical thinking skills.

Wang’s passion for teaching and learning is evident in her dedication to her students and her continuous efforts to improve her teaching practices. She is always seeking new ways to engage students in the learning process and help them develop critical thinking skills.

Wang’s commitment to teaching and learning is evident in her dedication to her students and her continuous efforts to improve her teaching practices. She is always seeking new ways to engage students in the learning process and help them develop critical thinking skills.

Wang’s passion for teaching and learning is evident in her dedication to her students and her continuous efforts to improve her teaching practices. She is always seeking new ways to engage students in the learning process and help them develop critical thinking skills.
Honor students reading anxieties misaligned

By Alex Li

As the school year winds down, students at Saratoga and beyond are spending enormous amounts of time preparing for the SAT and ACT, but are they performing as well as they could be? This question has been a topic of discussion for many years and is now being revisited in light of recent changes in the testing process.

The SAT and ACT are standardized tests that are used to assess students' readiness for college. They are widely used by colleges and universities in the United States to evaluate applicants and determine admissions decisions. However, the equating process, which is used to adjust scores for differences in test difficulty, has been criticized for not being accurate or reliable.

Equating is the process of adjusting scores for differences in test difficulty. It is done to ensure that scores from different test administrations are comparable. However, equating can lead to inaccuracies because it assumes that test difficulty is constant over time.

In the latest version of the SAT, the College Board made changes to improve the test's fairness and accuracy. One of these changes is the introduction of a new equating method called “anchor equating.” This method uses a set of questions that are common to all test administrations to align scores.

However, some experts have criticized anchor equating for its limitations. For example, it can be difficult to find common items that are equally difficult across all test sessions.

Another issue is that anchor equating is not able to account for differences in test difficulty that may occur due to changes in the test's content or format.

As a result, some critics argue that anchor equating is not the best way to adjust scores and that a more accurate method should be used instead.

Some argue that the current equating process is not equitable, because students who live in different areas with different levels of test preparation may end up with different scores for the same performance.

Others argue that the current equating process is not fair, because it can result in students who are not as prepared for the test receiving lower scores than students who are more prepared.

Despite these criticisms, the SAT is still widely used as a measure of college readiness, and many students continue to invest significant time and resources in preparing for it.

Given the importance of the SAT and the criticisms of the current equating process, it is important for students and educators to be aware of these issues and to consider alternative methods for adjusting scores.

Some experts suggest that a more flexible approach to equating should be considered, one that allows for differences in test difficulty and takes into account other factors that may influence student performance.

Ultimately, the goal should be to create a testing process that is fair, accurate, and that truly reflects students' abilities and preparation.

For more information, please visit the College Board's website or contact your school counselor.
UC system should make SAT/ACT essay optional

UC Berkeley, UC Santa Barbara, and UC Santa Cruz are expected to ban SAT/ACT essay requirements for 2019-20 applicants.

With college application season around the corner, it's time to start thinking about how best to present ourselves to admissions officers. Among the more prestigious universities, many have started accepting video presentations from applicants in place of the standard written essay—a decision that seems questionable. Although the essays are supposed to improve as a way to differentiate the pool of applicants, this leads to a flood of students trying to produce a good story on the SAT essay, and this demonstrates a lack of knowledge about what college admissions officers are actually looking for.

In addition, the school-wide testing scores, such as AP English Language and AP History, do not always give admissions officers much information about a student's interests and personality much more effectively than raw numbers can. For some schools, alumni interviews can be another important piece of gathering more personal insights about applicants. By sitting down and having a formal conversation, interviewers will get to know the student and find out more about his or her personality. While essays and letters of recommendation may give insight about a student's background, a well-written essay is subjective and can give admissions officers insight into what matters and qualities of a person that a writer would want to cement when describing a student. Sometimes, a student should show his or her capabilities in writing directly and all the essays should be simplified equally. It's important to write essays that say it is reflecting interviews for good reason. For one, they lack the nuance for the most important universities in the country, should the same.

UC Chicago should not replace alumni interview with videos

Michael Zhang

With college application season around the corner, it's time to start thinking about how best to present ourselves to admissions officers. Among the more prestigious universities, many have started accepting video presentations from applicants in place of the standard written essay—a decision that seems questionable. Although the essays are supposed to improve as a way to differentiate the pool of applicants, this leads to a flood of students trying to produce a good story on the SAT essay, and this demonstrates a lack of knowledge about what college admissions officers are actually looking for.

In addition, the school-wide testing scores, such as AP English Language and AP History, do not always give admissions officers much information about a student's interests and personality much more effectively than raw numbers can. For some schools, alumni interviews can be another important piece of gathering more personal insights about applicants. By sitting down and having a formal conversation, interviewers will get to know the student and find out more about his or her personality. While essays and letters of recommendation may give insight about a student's background, a well-written essay is subjective and can give admissions officers insight into what matters and qualities of a person that a writer would want to cement when describing a student. Sometimes, a student should show his or her capabilities in writing directly and all the essays should be simplified equally. It's important to write essays that say it is reflecting interviews for good reason. For one, they lack the nuance for the most important universities in the country, should the same.

Six شيّحون:davinci-worssens’ chance

With admissions rates dropping around 5% for universities in California and Stanford, even the best high school students aren’t able to get into college. As a result, along with the rise of online applications, platforms like theUC application allow students to apply to multiple universities even if they are not from the same state. If a student can afford it, they may apply to four or five universities, and if they are admitted, they may choose the one that they feel is the best for them.

In this context, it’s crucial for students to focus on their college essays. In addition, the school’s guidance counselors may also do an essay review for the students. It may not be the silver bullet to college admissions, but it may help them write a more compelling story.

Students should focus on one or two college essays that are flawed.

Shortening college essays takes advantage of a student’s degree of randomness to make the process less predictable, but also allows them to show off their creative writing skills. In addition, a few sentences in an essay may be more effective than a full-page essay. Furthermore, it seems to be more effective for students who lack a lot of time or resources to write their essays. Instead, students should focus on one or two college essays that are more meaningful, as they will be more likely to receive an acceptance letter.

For those students who are interested in college essays, the most important thing is to come up with a unique and compelling story. In addition, the topic should be something that the student is passionate about. It’s important to come up with a story that is not only unique, but also one that is interesting to admissions officers. In addition, the essay should be revised multiple times to ensure that it is free of errors.

Homecoming game at Levi’s inconvenient

For the first time, the school will hold the Homecoming game at Levi’s Stadium in Santa Clara, Calif. The homecoming game is an opportunity to play on an NFL field at no cost for fans, but for students, the game might be less than convenient. As a result, this forced me to rush parts of my homework and finish as late as possible. In other words, I did not have as much free time to do what I wanted to do, and I was still struggling to make my body stay up for more than 4 hours a day. As a result, it made it much harder to get as much sleep as I could. I think that this amount of sleep is important for anyone who wants to maximize their time on those Tuesdays for school projects. As a result, I did not get to sleep out of bed each day, even when it was considered an outdoor event.

Nifty DIYs are not as simple as they look

Shayla Kattara and Jayne Zou

We’re seeing a lot of Nifty DIY videos online, so we took the challenge to make some ourselves. However, we had a lot of trouble putting our school essays to the test. We discovered that making a video profile may be more important than raw numbers can. For some colleges, alumni interviews can be another important part of the process. Letting the school see that you are a strong candidate is a good thing.

The game won’t cost the school any money, but the success stories become disproven. But the success stories become disproven. This is the same thing as a professionally lit and shot stage play. It’s actually more effective than raw numbers can. For some colleges, alumni interviews can be another important part of the process. Letting the school see that you are a strong candidate is a good thing.
Milpitas: teaching care techniques

King ring
Marina Kupchisky

This summer, I decided to go out of my comfort zone and try something new: taking care of children at the camp counselor at the Humane Society of Silicon Valley in Milpitas. The camp is a place for elementary and middle school-aged kids to learn how to care for animals in the shelter. I applied to be a counselor and managed to pass the interview, though I soon learned that was the easiest part of the job.

I had attended this short camp many years before and had a great experience there. I applied to be a counselor and managed to pass the interview, though I soon learned that was the easiest part of the job.

The camp is a place for elementary and middle school-aged kids to learn how to care for animals in the shelter. I applied to be a counselor and managed to pass the interview, though I soon learned that was the easiest part of the job.

The first day was easily the most nerve-wracking. I didn’t know any of the kids I was assigned to, nor did I have much experience being in a position of responsibility other than previously having a ‘baby’ in elementary school.

This role was entirely new to me. There were eight counselors, including myself, and we were constantly on the move. We helped the kids properly hold animals, assisted them with crafts and cleaned up after them. Despite all of this, we were able to make them feel fun and engaging games and making sure they felt included and happy.

We also had to walk around and make sure the kids were treating the animals respectfully when they visited them, not to mention trying to maintain the balance between discipline and fun.

I ended up befriending a group of girls who were friends outside of the camp. I found that just spending time with them and listening to what they had to say was the last way that I could connect with them. By the end of the week, we concluded that we were the ‘pack leaders’ of sorts, which was made obvious by the fact that I had to adapt to get their attention. I look back at this day on the week (even when I had to hold large snakes) because of the moments I could make the campers laugh, like through a game of ‘amnesia’ tag. I find myself thinking of all these moments now.

Despite my initial self-doubt, I ended up saying that I think I want to be a camp counselor as an incredibly rewarding experience. I developed more assurance in my skills with children and realized I could handle greater responsibility.

As a counselor, I learned that was the easiest part of the job.

On a June morning in Yilan, Taiwan: eight years of teaching

Najia Lee

On a June morning in Yilan, Taiwan: eight years of teaching

Najia Lee

There were eight counselors, including myself, and we were constantly on the move. We helped the kids properly hold animals, assisted them with crafts and cleaned up after them. Despite all of this, we were able to make them feel fun and engaging games and making sure they felt included and happy.

We also had to walk around and make sure the kids were treating the animals respectfully when they visited them, not to mention trying to maintain the balance between discipline and fun.

I ended up befriending a group of girls who were friends outside of the camp. I found that just spending time with them and listening to what they had to say was the last way that I could connect with them. By the end of the week, we concluded that we were the ‘pack leaders’ of sorts, which was made obvious by the fact that I had to adapt to get their attention. I look back at this day on the week (even when I had to hold large snakes) because of the moments I could make the campers laugh, like through a game of ‘amnesia’ tag. I find myself thinking of all these moments now.

Despite my initial self-doubt, I ended up saying that I think I want to be a camp counselor as an incredibly rewarding experience. I developed more assurance in my skills with children and realized I could handle greater responsibility.

As a counselor, I learned that was the easiest part of the job.

On a June morning in Yilan, Taiwan: eight years of teaching

Najia Lee

On a June morning in Yilan, Tai-
CASSY prepares to move center of SHS

For decades of students who use the Student Health Services, CASSY (Clinical Assessment and Support for Students) provides them with professional mental health services. The service is staffed with professionals such as Marriage and Family Therapist (LMT), Marriage and Family Therapist (LMFT) and Marriage and Family Therapist (AMFT).

According to therapist Bradley Moeller, CASSY is a confidential service that is ready to be there for students. “We’re here to support students, and if the student is open to that support, then we’re able to provide that support.” Through the right appointments with students, CASSY can be a more central place for students who need to talk about their mental health.

The student/wellness center opening at the center of campus, CASSY will be a more common place for students to hang out and talk to a therapist or counselor if they need to. This spring, CASSY will be re-centered to the student center. This move will help CASSY to a more central place on campus, and said that the success they had with the center was a move to make the change and for them to have to go out to our students. With CASSY more present in the center, students will be able to reach out and talk to someone who can help them.

In total, CASSY provided 4,800 appointments last year. According to therapist Shel-Moeller, CASSY is staffed with professionals such as Marriage and Family Therapist (LMT), Marriage and Family Therapist (LMFT) and Marriage and Family Therapist (AMFT).

Like most other mental health centers, CASSY is open to all students and students are free to students, and students are welcome to simply walk in and chat with a therapist or counselor if they need to. However, confidentiality is required by the state of California and said that the success they had with the center was a move to make the change and for them to have to go out to our students. With CASSY more present in the center, students will be able to reach out and talk to someone who can help them.

Meet the Counselors

Kathleen Eastland is a Marriage and Family Therapist (AMFT) working as a part of CASSY at the center of campus, CASSY. Eastland has been working as a therapist for several years. Eastland believes that she is able to reach more students with CASSY being more present in the center.

One of the other main goals of relocating CASSY to the middle of campus, CASSY is to be more present in the center of campus, CASSY. Eastland believes that the new location will allow her to reach more students who are in the middle of campus.

The move to the 90 building and CASSY will be more present in the center of campus, CASSY. Eastland believes that the move will allow more students to be able to receive support from CASSY.

Moeller said that moving CASSY to the middle of campus, CASSY will be more present in the center of campus, CASSY. Eastland believes that the move will allow more students to be able to receive support from CASSY.

At the moment, the twin have a couple of Hindi songs that they say they are going to play for their YouTube audience of over 200 subscribers. But, I just wanted to stretch my arms when I arrive at water’s edge, the sun toasty on my back, I sink toes in silken sand, and strangling me. To Ocean murmuring, I arrive at water’s edge, the sun toasty on my back, I sink toes in silken sand, and strangling me.

Diverse representation on screen is important to provide people with ethnicity.

Not only is it important, it’s also growing. According to the Human Rights Campaign, the animated series has grown to 48 million subscribers. According to Voice, “Crazy Rich Asians” is the most popular movie for China’s box office, having a woman at its center gives, and becomes stronger without acquiring momentum. Additionally, all of the movies were in Mandarin. All in all, the use of Chinese characters on the screen has shown more confidence.

But all is forgotten after watching the last scene of the movie, created by di- rector Jon Chu. Convinced that it was becoming more culturally rich films to come.

Crazy Rich Asians defies movie stereotypes

As an Asian-American who is used to hearing his fair share of “what do you do?” questions from non-Asian-Americans, CASSY’s chief of staff, Julie Moeller, said that she has never heard anyone ask her that question before. “I’ve been an attorney for many years and have worked on legal matters that have nothing to do with race or ethnicity,” Moeller said. “I don’t think I’ve ever been asked that question before.”

Based on a novel about Asian-American he was working on, CASSY’s chief of staff, Julie Moeller, has worked on legal matters that have nothing to do with race or ethnicity. CASSY’s chief of staff, Julie Moeller, has worked on legal matters that have nothing to do with race or ethnicity.

The importance of family, another huge theme in Crazy Rich Asians, is a central theme in the movie. The rest of the beautiful movie, created by di- rector Jon Chu. Convinced that it was becoming more culturally rich films to come.

This accurate cultural representation has been working on for several years. Their career began in a college dorm at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, designing computer games. However, the Twin has not been working on for several years. Their career began in a college dorm at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, designing computer games.

When creating their music, the twins said that they wanted to do with our lives, “Akash told The Falcon. "We started under the name "LU- tion™ and stop — and all of this is just the beginning."

Everyone has their own unique dreams and goals, but having a woman at its center who gives, and becomes stronger without acquiring momentum. Additionally, all of the movies were in Mandarin. All in all, the use of Chinese characters on the screen has shown more confidence.

But all is forgotten after watching the last scene of the movie, created by di- rector Jon Chu. Convinced that it was becoming more culturally rich films to come.
2020: magically classic

The Wizard of Oz

Tin Woodman and Struma who all agree that it’s the perfect film.

Although the characters may seem like they have no special similarities, but the story is not just about the events of their adventures, but about the relationships between them and the people they encounter along the way. In this sense, the film transcends the traditional concept of a PG movie, as it has a universal appeal that can be enjoyed by people of all ages.

When first saw the 1971 and 2005 versions of "The Wiz," I thought both movies were dystopian and lacked the charm and humor of the original. However, the 1971 version, which was directed by Sidney L. Field, was more visually impressive and entertaining. In contrast, the 2005 version, which was directed by Andrew Adamson, was more cinematic and visually stunning.

The plot, though pretty similar to the original, could easily be adapted. Perhaps future fanatics could perform the show on their own, using the current technology and current standards.

The effects, however, were special. The Cowardly Lion was done with puppetry, while the Tin Woodman was done with a mechanical arm. The Wizard of Oz was done with a combination of puppetry and CGI, while the Scarecrow was done with a mechanical arm. The Witch of the West was done with a combination of puppetry and CGI, while the Wicked Witch was done with a mechanical arm.

In conclusion, the 1971 version is the better of the two. It has better special effects, a more engaging plot, and a cast that is much more enjoyable. However, the 2005 version is still enjoyable, and it offers a fresh perspective on the classic story. In the end, both versions are worth seeing, and I would recommend them both to anyone who enjoys a good movie.
Analysis: Community service is valuable, but is it worth the high price?

in-depth

Are you afraid to drive? Me too, and I’ve procrastinated on it for two years

Toh-yota

Flint Times

Around nine years ago, I bought my first phone in the car, thinking it was a great idea to buy a concert seat—only to find out it was a subpar concert and I was stuck in an event that I didn’t like. Since then, I’ve been afraid of driving. And now, I’ve been procrastinating on it for two years.

I’ve heard that if you learn how to drive, you’ll never have to worry about being late again. But what if being on time means being late to an event? What if being on time means missing out on a fun experience? I think that’s the problem with driving. It’s not just about being on time, it’s about being present.

I’ve heard that driving is a valuable skill to have. But what if driving is too valuable to learn? What if it’s too difficult to learn? I don’t know the answer to those questions. But I do know that I’m afraid to drive. And I’m probably not the only one.

Some people were only there to boost the “esthetic” of their college apps.

Daniel Ning

While I was procrastinating on learning to drive, I had a conversation with a friend who is also afraid of driving. We both feel that it’s not worth the time and money to learn how to drive. And we both feel that it’s not worth the stress and pressure to learn how to drive.

I think that’s why I’m afraid to drive. And I think that’s why I’m procrastinating on learning to drive. It’s not just about being on time, it’s about being present. And I don’t want to be present when I’m driving.

I’ve heard that driving is a valuable skill to have. But what if driving is too valuable to learn? What if it’s too difficult to learn? I don’t know the answer to those questions. But I do know that I’m afraid to drive. And I’m probably not the only one.

I’ve heard that driving is a valuable skill to have. But what if driving is too valuable to learn? What if it’s too difficult to learn? I don’t know the answer to those questions. But I do know that I’m afraid to drive. And I’m probably not the only one.
GIRLS’ VOLLEYBALL OFF TO A QUICK START

The girls’ varsity volleyball team has begun the season well and looks to continue this upward trend.

LBN

Prognosis: Last year, the Falcons had a 19-9 record, but came up short in the CCS. This year, the Falcons hope to push their record further. Although No. 2 Sarah Rieken, senior, and No. 1 Mackenzie Loo, senior, have high expectations, the team is more prepared and determined to work harder because of our performance last season, senior Maddy Smart said. "It has helped us be more efficient at practice and grown as a head start against the other teams."

"The team is really unified this year and everyone goes along well," Smart said. Also, the team has a new coach, and he has incorporated a new system, which the girls are excited about. The team is practicing for the CCS. The hard work they have put in throughout the season has helped them achieve this goal this season.

The team leads into the match against Los Gatos at Los Gatos High School on Sept. 10. The Falcons have been working hard to improve their record, and they are hopeful for this season.

The girl’s senior team captain Thia has said, "The team has been working hard in anticipation of their first match at Los Gatos High School on Sept. 5. We are expecting a lot of pressure and support from our fans. We are ready to face the challenge and work hard to bring our best performance." "We are more experienced as a team this season," Smart said.

Head Coach: Danny Merin

2017-2018 recap: The team struggled in 2017-2018. They lost several games and had a tough season. However, the team is optimistic and looks forward to a better season.

Prognosis: The girls’ varsity volleyball team has been working hard to improve their record. They have been practicing for the CCS and are looking forward to a successful season. The team leaders are confident in their team’s performance and hope to bring home the gold for the school.

Team members: Sarah Rieken, senior, Mackenzie Loo, senior, and Maddy Smart, senior.

GIRLS’ SHOTGUNS FOR CCS QUALIFICATIONS

Prognosis: After a lackluster season in which the girls’ varsity polo team finished with a 1-19-1 record, the team hopes to bounce back this season.

With experienced seniors like Sarah Reddy, senior, and junior, and other players like Ashvin Maheshwar, junior, the team is working hard to meet their expectations.

"We’ve been doing better so far, and I expect us to do even better this year," senior Sarah Rieken said. "I think we are capable of winning against some of our opponents."

The team hopes to build on their experience and improve this season. They are looking forward to a successful season and are working hard to achieve their goals.

Head Coach: Jerome Chang

2017-2018 recap: The team struggled in 2017-2018. They lost several games and had a tough season. However, the team is optimistic and looks forward to a better season.

Prognosis: The girls’ varsity polo team has been working hard to improve their record. They have been practicing for the CCS and are looking forward to a successful season. The team leaders are confident in their team’s performance and hope to bring home the gold for the school.

Team members: Sarah Rieken, senior, Mackenzie Loo, senior, and Maddy Smart, senior.

GIRLS’ WOLO PODS HOP TO REVERSE FORTUNES

Prognosis: After a lackluster season in which the girls’ varsity polo team finished with a 1-19-1 record, the team hopes to bounce back this season.

With experienced seniors like Sarah Reddy, senior, and junior, and other players like Ashvin Maheshwar, junior, the team is working hard to meet their expectations.

"We’ve been doing better so far, and I expect us to do even better this year," senior Sarah Rieken said. "I think we are capable of winning against some of our opponents."

The team hopes to build on their experience and improve this season. They are looking forward to a successful season and are working hard to achieve their goals.
Female care boxes fun but unneeded
WHY NOT JUST GO TO LOCAL DRUGSTORES, JUNIOR ASKS

As a student who uses female hygiene products once every month, you can be rest assured I know my periods. So when I heard that there are companies who compile a monthly subscription care package to send to women during that special time of the month, I was genuinely interested in what these packages included.

After months of YouTube drama and diss tracks, KSI and Logan Paul’s boxing match finally took place in Brit-ain’s Manchester Arena on Aug. 25. The fight featured two of the most popular content creators on YouTube. KSI, who has 19 million subscribers, and Paul, with 18 million, both publicized the fight as the “biggest event in internet history.”

Although the event ended in a draw, the fighters can certainly claim the match as a success. In addition to 21,000 people watching in the Manchester Arena, who paid an average of $180 each, the official livestream on YouTube also boasted over 800,000 viewers, each paying $10 to watch two people, who started training a couple of months ago, punch each other in the face. No one has disclosed how much money the fighters made from the event, but Business Insider estimates that each YouTu-bereceived around $5.5 million. This is actually an absurd amount of money for two amateurs who probably just trained.

KSI and Logan Paul have built their success by sitting in front of a camera. They film, edit and upload videos. So why did they decide to host a boxing match?

In their free time. To compare, the average salaries of Ultimate Fighting Championship (UFC) fighters is less than $500,000 a year. The publicity and money generated from this first-event probably led to KSI and Paul’s fight. By having a six-month-long promotional period, both YouTubers were able to rack up views and receive lots of attention.

Since their fight was announced earlier this year, KSI and Paul have engaged in an avalanche of press conferences, traded insults and provided numerous training updates on social media. Before the fight, each walked out to his own diss track targeting the other YouTuber. KSI and Logan Paul have built their success by sitting in front of a camera. They film, edit and upload videos. So why did they decide to host a boxing match? The answer is that drama with other YouTubers is an essential aspect of both fighters’ business models. With so much money and attention involved, turning this idea into a physical event was all but inevitable.

With months of hype and suspense ultimately leading to a tie, the ending sets up perfectly for a sequel. “Logan, I think there is only one thing to do I think we gotta rematch,” KSI said immediately after the fight ended. Paul responded, “I think it’s what the people want.”

Sel-lui-lar data
Selena Liu

As a student who uses female hygiene products once every month, you can be rest assured I know my periods. So when I heard that there are companies who compile a monthly subscription care package to send to women during that special time of the month, I was genuinely interested in what these packages included.

After all, many other companies send makeup packages or care packages to monthly subscribers; how different could a box mean for periods be?

So, doing what any curious person would do, I searched for one of these care packages online and ordered one from popular period-box company “The PMS Package.”

Although the event ended in a draw, the fighters can certainly claim the match as a success. In addition to 21,000 people watching in the Manchester Arena, who paid an average of $180 each, the official livestream on YouTube also boasted over 800,000 viewers, each paying $10 to watch two people, who started training a couple of months ago, punch each other in the face. No one has disclosed how much money the fighters made from the event, but Business Insider estimates that each YouTu-bereceived around $5.5 million. This is actually an absurd amount of money for two amateurs who probably just trained.

KSI and Logan Paul have built their success by sitting in front of a camera. They film, edit and upload videos. So why did they decide to host a boxing match?

In their free time. To compare, the average salaries of Ultimate Fighting Championship (UFC) fighters is less than $500,000 a year. The publicity and money generated from this first-event probably led to KSI and Paul’s fight. By having a six-month-long promotional period, both YouTubers were able to rack up views and receive lots of attention.

Since their fight was announced earlier this year, KSI and Paul have engaged in an avalanche of press conferences, traded insults and provided numerous training updates on social media. Before the fight, each walked out to his own diss track targeting the other YouTuber. KSI and Logan Paul have built their success by sitting in front of a camera. They film, edit and upload videos. So why did they decide to host a boxing match? The answer is that drama with other YouTubers is an essential aspect of both fighters’ business models. With so much money and attention involved, turning this idea into a physical event was all but inevitable.

With months of hype and suspense ultimately leading to a tie, the ending sets up perfectly for a sequel. “Logan, I think there is only one thing to do I think we gotta rematch,” KSI said immediately after the fight ended. Paul responded, “I think it’s what the people want.”

The subscription boxes include feminine products as well as other products like candles and sweet and savory snacks. and stress-relieving products, I could just buy them at the convenience store instead of ordering them from a company. Moreover, I could easily buy the snacks these packages send me in bulk at my local Costco. But I admit, as a woman, it’s nice to have a care package sent to you during the most stressful time of the month, no matter how easily accessible the actual items in the package are.

Having a stash of backup period products, painkillers and small trinkets can only make a woman’s day better, so these boxes may serve some purpose after all.